

I'm so excited to share this beautiful new cover...

The ebook of Tangled Threads has had a cover makeover and isn't she lovely? The print book will be following soon.

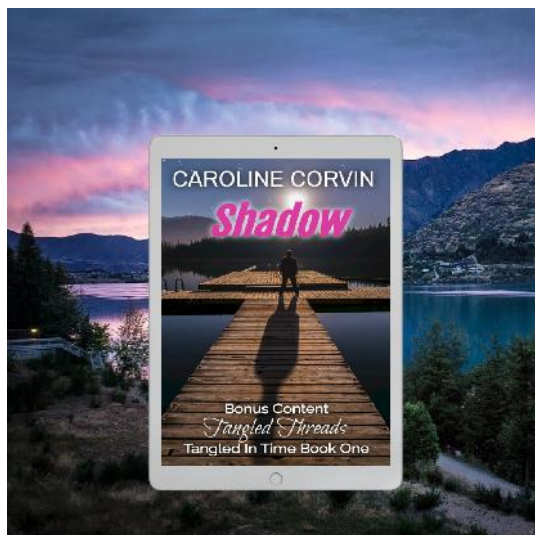

...and to announce that Tangled Threads is now available in KU!

Two men, two lives, one heart torn between them: what if her future lies in a time tangled past?

With vivid characters and evocative prose, Tangled Threads is a gripping and emotional exploration of the power of fate and the enduring nature of love. From the rugged Scottish countryside to the bustling streets of London, it takes readers on a breathtaking journey through the highs and lows of love and life. Tangled Threads is a first in series but can be read as a satisfying standalone.

Enjoy some Tangled Threads bonus content!

Now this month's bonus content comes with a wee spoiler alert. It won't totally wreck the book for you, but it might be best left till after the main course. However, if you're one of those people who is happy to eat dessert first—go ahead and enjoy. In this chapter Kate is holidaying in beautiful Queenstown and experiences the disturbing sensation that someone is lurking in the shadows of her mind.

Books, Film and Music

Over the last month I've been keeping my reading life interesting by diving into great books in my favourite genres by new-to-me authors. I started with a fabulous thriller by Alice Feeney, Rock Paper Scissors. There are intriguing twists and turns as we follow screenwriter Adam and his wife Amelia on a weekend away in the remote Scottish Highlands. I loved this book even if it was a little creepy in places (I didn't read it when home alone at night), and I'm currently immersed in another by the same author, His And Hers. I now know why I see her all over social media. Another author that I've noticed everywhere is Abby Jimenez. I was sad to finish the audiobook of her beautiful romance Life's Too Short where Vanessa, who has the threat of a cruel terminal disease hanging over her, meets the guy next door, Adrian (although it does have the required HEA). Quirky humour sits alongside a fair dose of angst to make a wonderful read. I'm now enjoying another by Abby, The Friend Zone, also on audiobook.

I finished watching Daisy Jones & The Six and it did not disappoint. The cast had me enthralled, tugging at my heart and provoking tears. I am now doing a very rare thing for me by rewatching my favourite episodes. A regular dose of Daisy Jones will be on my calendar for a while yet. We have also been enjoying The Night Agent. And finally the motor racing season is in full swing so between Formula 1 and the Australian Supercars series we are busy. Coincidentally I've started on Lauren Asher's Throttled on audiobook to find the MMC is a F1 driver!

Listening has been—you guessed it—I'm still stuck on Aurora by Daisy Jones & The Six.

Author Update

Caroline's writing life

This is literally me this past month juggling words in all directions. Working on four different books in two different series has been interesting to say the least. I've been in the middle of a huge creative burst which is exciting but can also be a wild ride.

For most of February and March, Tangled Hearts was with my editor, the fabulous Jacqueline Cangro. Getting her feedback and our zoom calls together are always highlights in the process of going from the inkling of an idea to published book. I love the way she falls into my characters and their lives so effortlessly and when we talk about them I feel like it's chatting to a friend about people we have in common. Of course following these chats, I then have work to be done to polish the book into the form I want you to have.

Because I'm having a holiday (yay) and also I need to give my new cover designer time to work on the whole series, I'm now looking towards a June release. As you will see I'm giving KU a whirl—Tangled Paths will go in soon and this third book will launch in KU.

While Jackie was doing her editor magic, I did some solid work on Tangled Past, delving into the depths of Cassie's and Nik's relationship. As part of Cassie's story formed the Tangled In Time novella for the series, I'm now working on a replacement since you'll see the whole big picture in the book. You will meet Cassie's mother Blair and father Daniel and share their intriguing love story in the novella.

And, yes, I did say two series. I'm pleased to have a few chapters for the first book of a contemporary series set in a small town in Scotland. There will be five books in total as well as a prequel novella, and I have the concepts for each mapped out (not the whole plot as you may know I'm no plotter). And there will be a few familiar characters making an appearance.

It's a crazy busy life being a writer, but I wouldn't want to do anything else.

If you think Twitter isn't a nice place to hang out, perhaps you've been doing it wrong. Dogs of Twitter is one of the happiest places on the planet. Here's one of my favourites. This beautiful spotty boy from London has the Twitter handle @syd_akaYog and he's a bright spot in my morning check on the Twitter feed. I'll introduce you to some more of my favourite Twitter dogs as we go along.

Caroline's Corner

Welcome to my world

Hello from beautiful (and warm) Queensland, Australia. Not intending to inspire envy but, I'm on holiday!

I desperately needed this holiday for a lot of reasons:

- * A reward at the end of the marathon of building a new house, with over two years of stress, temporary homes, and hands-on hard work, although mine has been a fraction of what DIY Dude, aka my husband, has done.

- * A bright something good to look forward to after tragedy hit our little family in the January floods.

- * A reprieve from the crazy although totally wonderful life of a writer—although my characters are NOT on holiday and the easiest way to shut them up is to still do a little writing along the way. It's actually a great trial run for when we achieve our dream of extended travel and I become a writer on the road.

- * And finally a chance to enjoy some warm weather after the summer that never was in Auckland. Beach, swimming, and sunshine all abound in this part of the world and I'm loving it.

Getting in some extra reading is an added bonus. I'll share my favourites next month. Hope you have some wonderful reads on your shelf too, because whether it's holidays or a regular work week, books are life!

Take care

Caroline
